Golf Tourism in China

An International Perspective

Zhao Kuan, Ph.D China New Zealand Tourism Research Unit University of Waikato, New Zealand

The Manual Association and the second

Two Sections of This Lecture

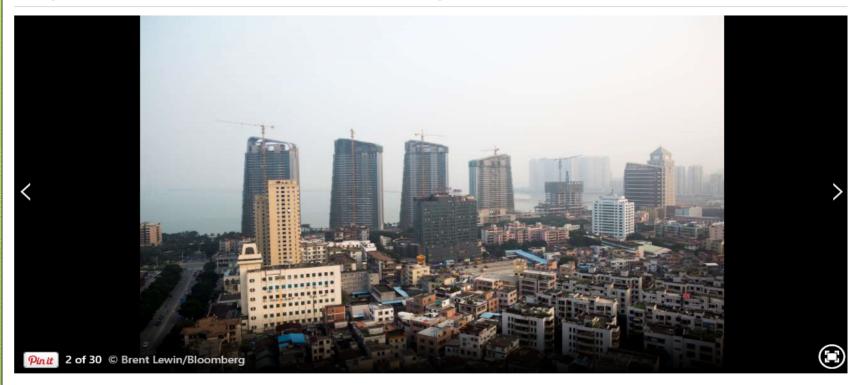

> A Global Overview

China: When West Turns to East

MUTUAL FUNDS & ETFS

29 predictions for 2015: Fortune's Crystal Ball

CHINA SPUTTERS

The big question for the 2015 global economy is how dramatic China's economic slowdown will be. Our answer? Meryl Streep dramatic. A gauge of factory output in November registered an eight-month low, which piles onto a continuing slump in real estate. And this coming spring, expect China to announce its lowest official GDP growth target in nearly a quarter of a century: 7%. (Real GDP won't outpace it either, as it has in the past.) The bright side? As China takes its foot off the gas, it can focus on reform efforts like dealing with its crippling pollution. The downside: Much lower growth could trigger widespread Chinese loan defaults--with global repercussions.

MUTUAL FUNDS & ETFS

29 predictions for 2015: Fortune's Crystal Ball

CHINA SMARTPHONE EXPLOSION

When reports surfaced that Xiaomi was raising money at a $50 billion valuation in late 2014, many were incredulous. But the Chinese company, which sells high-quality phones at razor-thin margins, overtook Samsung as China's No. 1 smartphone seller this year. Now enter a half dozen other Chinese smartphone makers--including Meizu, OnePlus, and Vivo. Look for one to have a Xiaomi-like rise next year.

Home > C&RB News

Golf Course Boom in China Skidding to a Halt?

By Joe Barks | June 30th, 2014

Share this article: in f 🗾

The Chinese government has begun cracking down on a ban on new courses that was first imposed in 2004, because of concerns about shrinking land and water resources. Five courses in the country were recently demolished or taken over by authorities for conversion to other purposes.

The Chinese government is cracking down on a ban that was imposed in 2004 that no new golf courses could be built in China, CBSSports.com reported, drawing from a Reuters report.

Five courses in China were recently demolished or taken over and converted into other entities by Chinese authorities, CBSSports.com reported. "The ban was imposed to protect China's shrinking land and water resources in a country that is home to a fifth of the world's population but which has just 7 percent of its water," the website said. "The only place exempt is the southern resort island of Hainan."

While that may make sense, CBSSports.com noted, it's still unfortunate for a country that has been actively trying to grow the sport of golf for its younger populations.

Developers in the country have often skirted around the "no new golf courses" rule by labeling their projects something without the word "golf" in them, CBSSports.com added, but the government now seems to be catching on to that dodge.

Reuters reported that water consumption has become a real concern for the Chinese. "The crackdown could be more serious now because of China's pollution crisis, developers said. One of the reasons for the 2004 ban was because the high use of fertilizer and pesticide to grow grass for golf courses was causing water pollution."

Reuters quoted Ma Jun, a director at the Institute of Public and Environmental Affairs in Beijing, a non-governmental organization, as saying that "the way many golf courses are built and managed has a negative impact on the environment."

CBSSports.com noted that maybe the Chinese could learn from the recent redesign of Pinehurst No. 2, which will reduce water usage from 55 million gallons of water a year to just 15 million.

Related Articles

GCSAA to Offer Golf Course Education in China

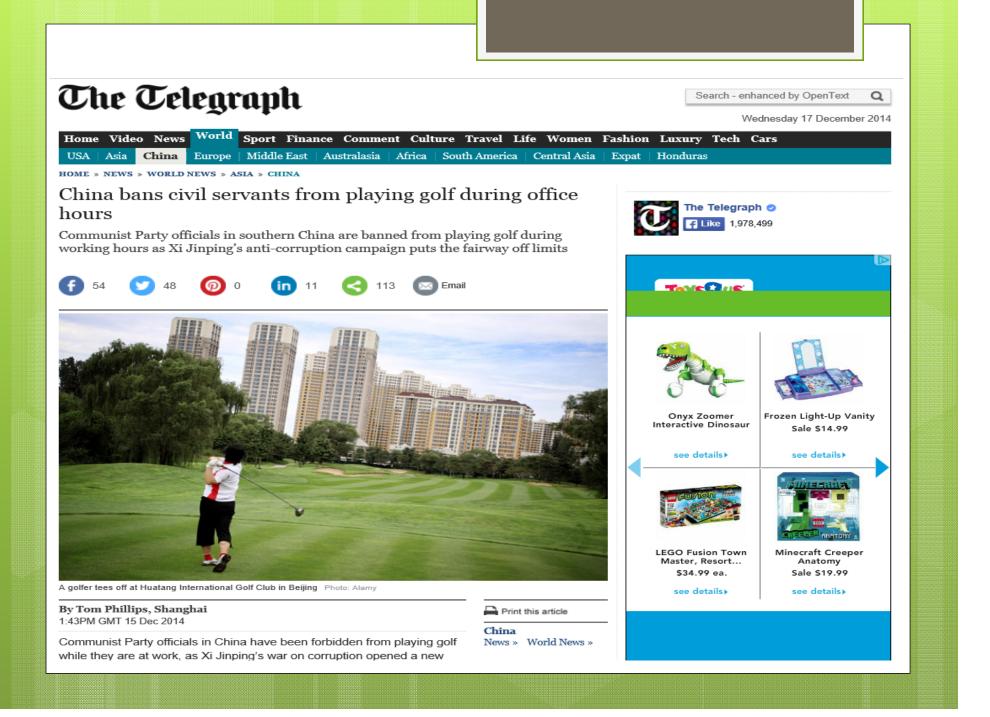

Clearwater Bay GC to Open in China in May

GCBAA Foundation's Sticks for Kids Program Heading to China

Golf Course Architects to Honor Rees Jones

Baltusrol Makes Bid to Become a National Historic Landmark

Two Sections of This Lecture

- > A Global Overview
- China: When West Turns to East

A Case of China

Sustainability is playing a key role in the sport moving forward, with new forms of water management being implemented that allow golf courses to be constructed in parts of the world that previously you would not have imagined possible. All in all, it could lead to another boom in golf tourism.

I always get asked where I think the next big golfing destination will be, and I can't look past China.

Colin Montgomerie, 30 times champion of the European Tour

IAGTO

- In 2012 along, more than 120 Asian companies joined IAGTO, and its Asian membership had accounted for more than 15% by then;
- More than half of IAGTO's tour operator members sell Asia golf destinations;
- In 2012, 1.6 million golf tourists travelled with IAGTO operators

Practices of Emerging Economies

- Thailand and Indonesia continue to represent wonderful value and offer golfing experience that is unparalleled.
- Malaysia is seeing and increase in the number of golf tourists
- Golf tourism industry in Thailand expected to grow 15% to 4 billion USD by 2015. Up 50% in last three years
- Golf tourism is now a core pilliar in Abu Dhabi's long-term tourism strategy
- Vietnam has constructed a number of luxury courses including Ho Chi Minh Golf trail consisting of six luxury courses and resorts

A SWOT Analysis of China As A Golf Tourism Destination

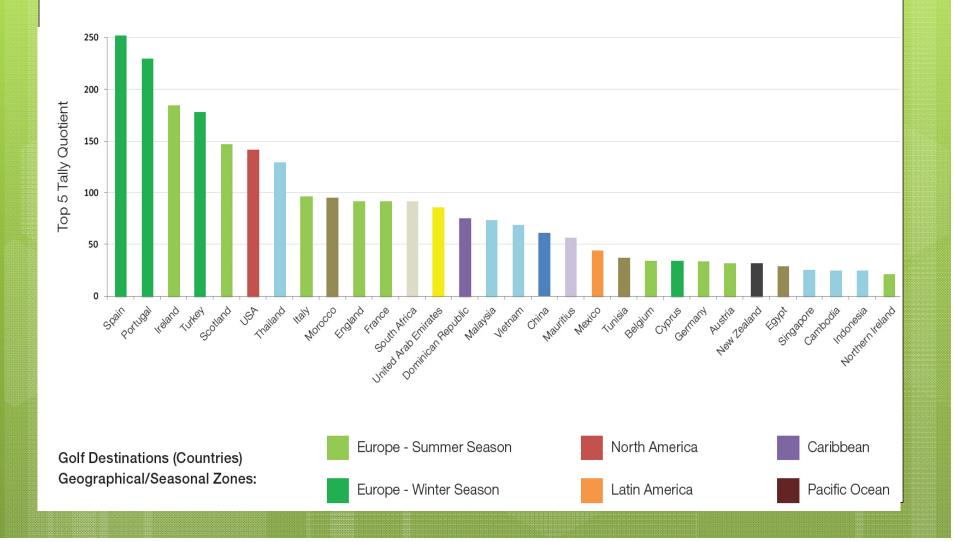

Key Factors When Choosing A Golf Destination

	NOT IMPORTANT	VERY IMPORTANT
Price of package
Quality of golf courses
Accessibility
Qual. of accomodation
Climate
Nr. of golf courses
Entertainment
Golf tradition

Source: KPMG Golf Travel Insights survey

IAGTO: Importance of Golf Destinations

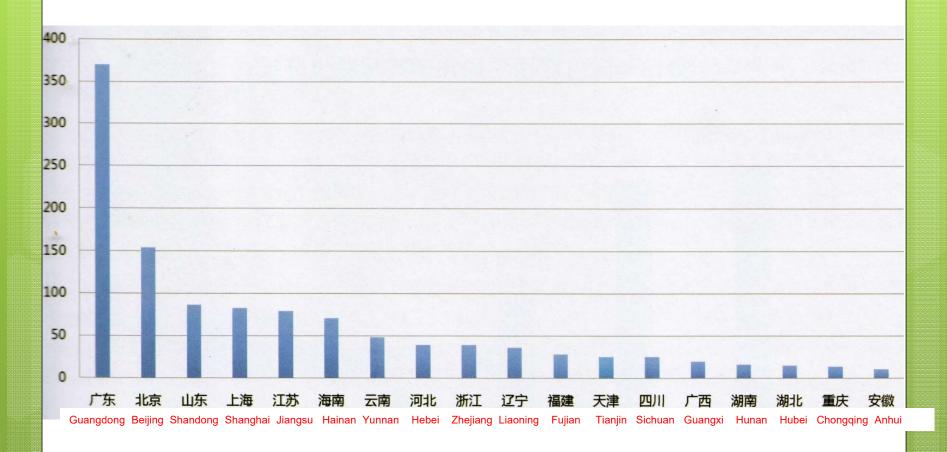

2015年8月6日星期四

Future Golf Trend in China (2013)

Very Active: Yunnan, Hainan, Hebei, Shandong, Sichuan Active: Jiangsu, Zhejiang, Guangdong, Hunan, Hubei, Chongqing, Guizhou Normal Active: Fujian, Guangxi, Jiangxi, Anhui, Liaoning, Beijing, Henan Not Very Active: Shanxi, Shan'xi, Tianjin, Heilongjiang, Neimeng, Jilin Not Active at All: Shanghai, Ningxia, Xinjiang, Gansu, Qinghai, Tibet

Total Golf Rounds in China (2013)

Top Three are Guangdong, Beijing and Shandong

Regional Characteristics of Chinese Golf Travellers (2013)

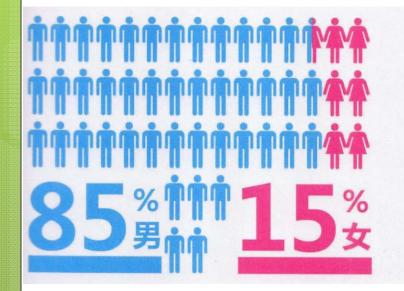

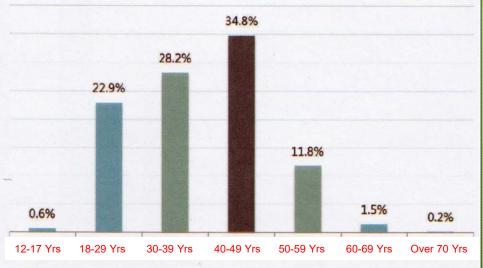

Guangdong Beijing Shanghai Tianjin Hainan Hubei Jiangsu Hunan Yunnan Shanxi Neimeng Shanxi Sichuan Zhejiang Jiangxi Shandong Hebei Anhui Liaoning Guangxi Gansu Fujian Henan Jilin Heilongjiang

Demographic Characteristics of Chinese Golf Travellers (2013)

Gender

Age

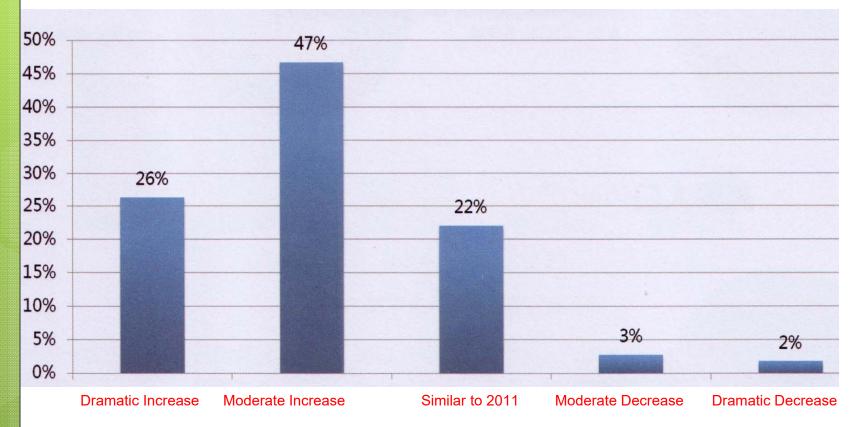

Male

Female

Changes of Future Travel Expectations of Chinese Golf Travellers (2011-2013)

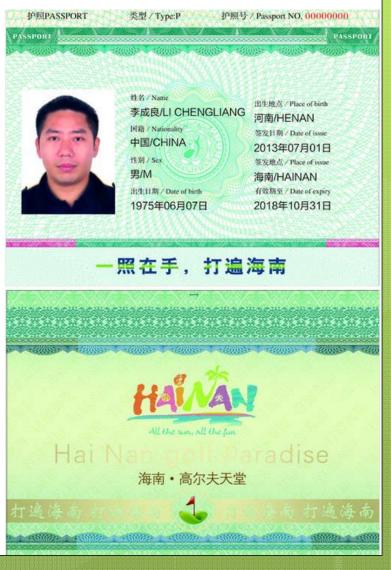

Golf Tourism in Hainan (2014)

Samples of Hainan Golf Travel Products

Dilemmas of Hainan Golf Facing Scale Inflexion Unbalanced Locations Unbalanced Hign and Low Seasons Low Level Management and Marketing Improper Positioning in Terms of Service and Marketing

Thank You !

